

Illinois Butterfly Monitoring Network Workshop
Grant Agreement Number: 12-005W
Timeframe of Report: July 2011 – December 2012

Project Objectives

The primary objective is to teach citizen scientists proper protocol and ID skills to participate in data collection on Illinois butterfly species on public lands. Additionally the network seeks to raise awareness amongst Illinois citizens about the project and increase involvement.

Introduction

For the past twenty-five years the Illinois Butterfly Monitoring Network (IBMN) has been collecting quantitative data on butterfly populations around the greater Chicago-land region and the state. The directive is to utilize a standardized protocol for data collection that allows land managers to evaluate long-term trends in a changing landscape. Equally as important to the mission of the network is engaging citizen scientists in the process of collecting this data. Our sites and our volunteers are widespread and due to the nature of the project and the protocol, they work singly or in pairs throughout the season. The isolated nature of the fieldwork means that creating opportunities for exchange of information are all the more vital to the success of the project. The IBMN offers opportunities for fellowship, mentorship, and continuing education between citizen scientists and professional biologists throughout the year.

Methods

Educational materials and online resources are an integral part of the ongoing training and education that keep the program running. These require updates on a semi-regular basis and improved access to remain valid and accessible to the volunteers involved in the program.

The annual meeting in March, trainings throughout the spring, and a summer field trip provide for the interactions that strengthen the skill set of our volunteers. Prospective monitors apply via our website that now links directly to a new volunteer database. Currently the website contains much of the educational materials and provides critical resources for monitors and land managers who are involved in the network.

Data is collected in the field and then submitted through an online link. The website also has links to the handbook with protocol, image banks, data forms, and data summaries. A recent redesign as well as a renewal of the subscription to our domain name was completed to facilitate access of the materials as well as improve site navigation for monitors and project managers alike.

Starting in 2011 and continuing to the present, we have been working to improve our communications and retention of volunteers while reducing our “footprint”. With that in mind we looked for an alternative to the mass paper mailings used extensively in our history. While the website provides a passive avenue to provide information, there was still a need to communicate directly with volunteers throughout the year.

Volgistics® is software that is specifically designed to manage the metadata of a large volunteer corp. Currently utilized by a number of non-profits including the Chicago Academy of Sciences and its Peggy Notebaert Nature Museum, the IBMN was able to establish a database of its own by collaborating with the volunteer department at the Peggy Notebaert Nature Museum. By making modifications to the traditional format of the software we have been able to create our own interactive database to store the hundreds of records of past and present monitors, county coordinator contacts, land managers, and the sites they all collaborate on.

Results and Discussion

Updated training materials for monitors including Power Point presentations for spring workshops were created. The greatly modified website was able to retain the domain name that is familiar to those long involved in the network. Additionally the new training materials have been uploaded for easy access throughout the year, allowing for more remotely located volunteers to obtain, or refresh, training without commuting into the city on specific dates. The materials and website are the first point of reference for numerous networks starting both within the Midwest and across the country. The accessibility of all of these is greatly facilitating our mission to mentor not only monitors within our own network, but those who wish to start similar programs in their own area.

Volgistics® now contains historic and current season information on sites, land managers, and monitors. This has allowed for streamlined record keeping and volunteer communication. In addition there is now an enhanced ability to update and review information across seasons keeping information relevant. The interactive nature of this software makes possible electronic communication within a season in much more directed manner. Subsets of volunteers, such as new-recruits, can be sorted and specifically contacted.

An annual workshop in March 2012 was organized with a world-renowned speaker, Dr. May Berenbaum, as the keynote. It was well attended by 50 – 60 members of the network and prospective volunteers and members of the community. The field workshop in July of the same year was also attended by over 25 members including some of the newest monitors looking to learn from the more experienced members about field ID. These experiences are critical in translating indoor training into the practical skills required for accurate data collection.

Conclusion

Monitor trainings were well attended in the current season, frequently reaching capacity with waiting lists for attendance, exceeding all expectations. Notifications for these were posted on the updated website and sent via Volgisitics® software. Paper mailings have been completely eliminated from the annual budget for the Illinois Butterfly Monitoring Network meeting our goals of a “greener” approach as well as a less labor intensive one. Additionally several sites that had fallen into inactive status have now been re-assigned, allowing for the continuation of data collection at key locations with good historical data.

While it is not possible to confirm the direct relationship between a recent increase in participation and the many updates and events made possible by this grant funding, we can say that preliminary numbers indicate that the 2013 season will represent at least a 30% increase in volunteer participation and likely much higher. Regardless of the specific reason for the increase, dealing with such a large influx of new monitors in a single season would have been much more challenging, if not untenable, without the data management and volunteer communication and training updates.

About Us / How to Join

Our Mission:

The Illinois Butterfly Monitoring Network engages citizen scientists in the process of collecting quantitative data on butterfly populations. Our goal is to provide data collected with a standardized protocol that allows land managers to evaluate long-term trends in a changing landscape. The Network also offers opportunities for fellowship, mentorship, and continuing education between citizen scientists and professional biologists.

Requirements:

- Click on the Apply Now button and submit an application form
- Attend a training before beginning to monitor
- Receive a site assignment from the IBMN
- Visit your site 6 to 8 times between Memorial Day weekend and August 8
- Conduct a 1-2 hour survey on each visit
- Submit your data online

We also provide ongoing training and support from the network leaders.

Summary Payment Terms

This is a summary of the Volgistics payment terms. The complete Volgistics payment terms are available at www.volgistics.com/Payment-Options.htm. By paying for the Volgistics service you indicate your acceptance of the Volgistics payment terms and that you have determined that the Volgistics service suits your volunteer information management needs.

Two payment methods are available: Automatic payment charged to a credit card, and Pre-payment by check or credit card. Volgistics reserves the right to change service fees. If a change in service fees is to occur Volgistics will alert the billing contact for your account at least 30 days in advance. With the Automatic payment method, the new rate is charged beginning on the first billing date following the new rate's effective date. With the Pre-payment method, the new rate applies on the new rate's effective date and the account's expiration date is automatically adjusted based on the new rate.

Customers may cancel their account and use of the Service at anytime using the Cancel option under Account Management in the Setup area. SERVICE FEES ALREADY PAID (or account credit balances) AT THE TIME OF CANCELLATION ARE NON-REFUNDABLE. If you use Automatic payment Volgistics will cease billing your credit card for the monthly service fee when you cancel your account. All payments must be made in US funds.
